

Hello, my name is Kelly Webb. I am a resident of Rapid City and do the majority of my shopping at Breadroot. I have been an advocate for holistic health and natural healing has been a passion of mine for as long as I can remember. I am a big supporter of organic food, products that don't contain bioengineered ingredients and going to nature first whenever possible. I believe stores like Breadroot are important and provide the bridge for individuals and families that share these values. I also believe education is important to help people understand why their health is important and that food is the foundation.

I had a 30-year career where I worked my way up from entry level accounting to upper management. I worked in the areas of accounting, payroll, information technology, mid-level management and upper management. I enjoy working to solve problems and feel I have both an analytical mind and a creative mind. I enjoy combining these two to find solutions to problems. I also owned and ran a brick-and-mortar martial arts school for several years so I have a pretty good sense of what it takes to run an operation such as Breadroot. While I have not been in the grocery business, I believe there are similarities. I currently have an online wellness group where I teach Qigong and lifestyle approaches to better health and wellness. I look forward to serving the Breadroot community and helping it grow.
