

Jillian Smith is running for a seat on the Breadroot Cooperative Board of Directors because she loves what the Co-op offers our community and wants to contribute to its continued growth. She appreciates the wide variety of dietary needs the Co-op accommodates—in her family of food enthusiasts, Jillian is the lone vegetarian among her Indigenous wife and children. Everyone in the family can find what they like at the Coop, whether that is tofu and tempeh or bison steaks. Plus, her kids can independently pick out their own lunchbox treats, and she can be confident they are choosing among options she'd approve. As an attorney, Jillian represents tribes and tribal entities that practice and advocate for food sovereignty and chairs the Diversity and Inclusion Committee of the South Dakota State Bar. Jillian understands Directors' fiduciary duties and navigates the Coop's Bylaws comfortably. This role feels like it would be a natural fit, and she hopes you will agree and vote for her.
